6 AMERICANS LOST AMONG 52 ABOARD THE LINER MARINA

Consul Frost Reports That the List Has Been Corrected.

MAN BELIEVED LOST IS SAFE

Russia Sends Her Foremost General to Take Charge of the Army in Dobrudja; Germans Admit Evacuation of Vaux Fort on the Western Front.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—A telegram to the American embassy today from Wesley Frost, American consul at Queenstown, states that the discrepancies in former reports regarding the number of Americans on board the British steamship Marina and the names of those lost have now been cleared up.

In addition to the five Americans reported yesterday as having been lost, the name of Bule, given in early advices as Brue, is added to the list of dead. The name of Middletown, first reported lost, is now in the list of American survivors. These changes make the total number of Americans on board 52, of whom six were lost.

AWAIT GERMAN REPORT.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2.—State Department officials still were waiting today for Germany's version of the destruction of the British steamer Marina.

A news dispatch from Athens last night saying the Greek government had been notified Germany intended to sink without warning all ships carrying supplies to the Allies was regarded here as of great importance. So far as is known the United States has received no such notification and it is not known whether one has been sent to other neutrals.

Secretary Lansing said today that the United States understands Germany's pledges not to sink merchantmen without warning and without providing for the safety of passengers and crew applies to ships with defensive armament. No distinction was drawn in the correspondence between armed and unarmed ships and the State Department does not accept any contention that Germany's responsibility is limited to those without armament.

Nevertheless it is admitted that Germany has always taken a distinct view of the status of armed ships and it is thought probable that she will attempt to inject the point into the present situation. So long as the policies of the government are so utterly divergent it is thought possible that Germany might use the Marina case to settle the issue. Her increased submarine warfare combined with the increasing number of armed Allied ships an dtheir increasing efficiency in defense makes it a vital question to her.

Secretary Lansing while refusing to give out any further details of the official report of the sinking from the American embassy in London said his information was substantially the same as that of the newspapers.

TAKES CHARGE IN DOBRUDJA.

LONDON, Nov. 2.—The Wireless Press has received a dispatch from Bucharest saying that Lieutenant General Vladimir Sakharoff, commander of the Russian forces in Galacia, arrived in Bucharest today and will take command of the army in Dobrudja.

Lieutenant General Sakharoff is rated as one of the ablest Russian commanders. He came into special prominence last summer during the Russian drive in Volhynia and Galacia gaining a number of important successes over the Austrians before the Russian advance was halted.

GERMANS ABANDON VAUX.

BERLIN, via wireless to Sayville, Nov. 2.—The British attempted to advance on the Somme front north of Courcelette yesterday, but were repulsed, the war office announced today. The French gained small advantages in the sectors of Leat Boeufs and Rancourt.

Fort Vaux, on the Verdun front, has been evacuated by the Germans.

General von Linsingen's troops on the eastern front yesterday stormed Russian positions on the left bank of the Stokhod river. They inflicted heavy losses on the Russians, says the statement, and captured more than 1,600 men.

Captain Koenig Refuses to Permit Public to View the German Undersea Merchantman.

By Associated Press.

NEW LONDON, Conn., Nov. 2.—Activities of a varied nature centered about the German undersea merchantman Deutschland, and her captain, Paul Koenig, today. While the crew busied themselves behind the barrier which hides the submarine from public view in preparing to dispose of the 700 tons of valuable cargo which the Deutschland brought from Bremen, customs officials and naval officers prepared for the inquiry to determine the status of the craft.

Captain Koenig refused a plea that he allow the public to view his craft. None but government or city officials might enter the enclosure, he said, and the restrictions that prevailed at Baltimore were placed in effect again.

MAKING LONG FLIGHT

Engine Trouble Compels Aviator to Land at Erie, Pa.

By Associated Press.

ERIE, Pa., Nov. 2.—Aviator Victor Carlstrom, who is flying from Chicago to New York, landed in this city at 11.28 A. M., today because of engine trouble but thereby establishing a new American non stop flight record. Erie is just half the distance he set out to cover.

The aviator was flying about seven miles south of Erie when a pipe became loose on his engine and he made for this city so that he could obtain the necessary mechanical assistance.

He landed easily in a large open field at 30th and Beech streets and jumping from the car at once began repairs. He said he was delighted with the flight as far as he had gone and although disappointed because of the slight engine trouble he deemed it advisable to take no unnecessary chances as he was very anxious to get to New York by 6 o'clock this evening.

The engine was doing all he expected of it in the way of speed, the distance between Cleveland and Erie having been covered in 30 minutes.

IS CONFIDENT OF A VICTORY

Republican Nominee Predicts Success at Polls on Tuesday; William H. Taft Gives Reasons for Defeating Wilson; O. R. C. Man for Hughes.

By Associated Press.

BATAVIA, N. Y., Nov. 2.—Charles E. Hughes declared today before an audience here that he is entirely confident of the result in Ohio and Indiana.

"I have returned from a trip through Ohio and Indiana," he said, "with a profound sense of gratification and entire confidence with respect to the results in both states. In both Ohio and Indiana it is not exaggerating to say that I had receptions which perhaps exceeded those accorded to any other Presidential candidate. That was of course, as I said last night, not a tribute to me, but an indication of the deep interest the people are taking in the essential conditions of their prosperity and their satisfaction that there is a great reunited Republican party ready for service at this critical time.

"So far as promises go, no one can exceed the promises of our opponents, but we measure what they say by what they have done."

Mr. Hughes then reiterated the policies which he intends to follow if elected.

TERRE HAUTE, Ind., Nov. 2.—Charles Evans Hughes closed his Western campaign in this city last night with a statement to the press in which he predicts a Republican victory in Indiana and in the nation.

"I am leaving Indiana after what is perhaps the most wonderful reception ever given to a candidate for the presidency," said Mr. Hughes. "This splendid tribute was, not to me personally, but as the representative of the great united Republican party, moving forward to victory and service for the nation. The men of Indiana have organized a people's victory and I want to thank the leaders of the reunited Republican party for their effective work."

In his final speech of the Western campaign, made in Terre Haute last night before an audience that cheered him incessantly, ringingly, Mr. Hughes declared while he understood that union labor had been told officially to vote against him, he knew that nobody could direct or control the labor vote and that it would be cast according to its sober judgment.

"You can be sure," he continued, "that in the long run the American people do not make a mistake with respect to what is necessary to their prosperity and the future of the country. I have felt in these days a growing sentiment. There has been a very perceptible current of opinion and it gives me an assurance that the American people have been sifting the various claims that have been made and have been coming to their own conclusions. They know perfectly well that we are in a very unsatisfactory condition."

TAFT TALKS HUGHES.

STEUBENVILLE, O., Nov. 2.—Before an audience last night that packed Herald Square Theatre, former President W. H. Taft gave these four reasons why President Woodrow Wilson should be defeated: The passage of the Underwood and the Adamson bills, his Mexican policy and because Charles Evans Hughes is the man to lead America through the crisis which will come with the closing of the war.

Mr. Taft outlined the events occurring in the threatened railroad strike up to and including the passage of the Adamson bill. Concerning the passage of the bill Mr. Taft said:

"Within the short period of four days, Congress passed the law. It is doubtful if the strike would have been as injurious in its results as the men threatened to make it, but still it would have been most embarrassing. Under the duress of the threat the President of the United States and Congress of the United States succumbed.

"It was one of the greatest national humiliations to which the people of this country have ever been subjected. It struck most a blow at the principle of arbitration for the settlement of industrial disputes. It is enough to cause the defeat of President Wilson. Any legislator that puts legislation through to win votes should be turned out of office.

"Wilson ought to be turned out of office on account of his Mexican policy," said Mr. Taft as he concluded a lengthy and extremely interesting review of what the President has done. He continued, "And now Mr. Hughes is asked what he would have done. He certainly would not have done what Mr. Wilson did and what Mr. Wilson did is reason enough for not allowing him to continue to exercise the responsibility of attempting to get out of the mess into which he has brought the country."

RAILROAD MAN FOR HUGHES.

PRINCETON, Ind., Nov. 2.—One hundred and thirty Princeton railroad and shop men, within a few minutes, pledged themselves to Hughes and a protective tariff when, at a big meeting of southern railroad employes in Bach's hall here, a railroad men's Republican club was organized. The meeting was a revelation to those who believed the so-called eight-hour law had drawn all railroad men's support to President Wilson.

The feature of the big meeting was an address by James D. Ryan, secretary-treasurer of the local Order of Railway Conductors and one of the oldest organizers of the order in the country in point of service. Mr. Ryan, until two weeks ago, was for Wilson; he had expressed the belief that he must support him. Last night Mr. Ryan told why he was against Wilson and could not support him, and why he believed he deserved the condemnation of every brotherhood man.

Ryan declared Wilson "meddled" in the railroad situation, with the result that the men failed to get an eight hour day or anything else.

WANTS $500 FOR BRAKIE'S LAUGH

Woman Sues P. & L. E. Because Trainman Did Not Take Her Seriously About Leaving Train.

Claiming that a Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad brakeman laughed at her when she requested a passenger train to stop at Broad Ford junction on the night of February 29 last, and that she was put off three quarters of a mile from her station and compelled to walk that distance at midnight on a bitter cold winter night, Alice McKay of Broad Ford today entered suit against the railroad for $1,000.

Mrs. McKay claims she contracted a cold and became ill as a result of the exposure she was thus subjected to. For the damages thus sustained she asks $500 and $500 in addition for the embarrassment she had to endure when the brakeman laughed at her.

The plaintiff alleges she boarded a Pittsburg & Lake Erie train at Dickerson Run and paid the eight cents fare the conductor demanded for her passage to Broad Ford junction. When the train did not slow up as it neared the junction, she alleges, she asked the brakeman the reason and he only laughed at her.

COME-BACK AND COME-OVER BOYS TAKE THE STUMP

Former Progressive and Ex-Democrat Speak for Mr. Hughes.

A BIG RALLY AT MT. BRADDOCK

School House is Crowded When MacQuarrie, Smiley, Patterson and Keegan Speak for Republican Ticket; Democratic Shams Are Exposed.

At the Republican rally in Mount Braddock last night four men spoke who were typical of the classes who will elect Charles E. Hughes—the loyal Republicans, the Boys Who Have Come Back, and the Boys Who Have Come Over. H. K. MacQuarrie and J. R. Smiley represented the first class. George Patterson is a former Bull Mooser who will vote for Hughes. James J. Keegan is a former Democrat who has seen the folly of the present administration.

Mount Braddock citizens crowded the school house last night and applauded the Republican speakers to the echo. Attorney George Patterson's address was particularly well received, for Mr. Patterson is well known in Mount Braddock and is a resident of North Union township.

"He has kept us out of war," that lone Wilson argument, was ripped to pieces. All four of the speakers seemed to enjoy denouncing this policy particularly after dwelling on Wilson's failures in general.

"Has he kept us out of war?" asked Mr. Patterson. "American citizens have been slain in Mexico; Americans have been ordered from the country. Our troops have crossed the border, and our marines entered Vera Cruz and shot up the town. Mr. Wilson says that this is peace. If this is peace, then there is no war."

Mr. MacQuarrie said, "The President may have kept us out of war, but I do not want to be kept out of war in the way that he has done it."

Attorney Patterson pointed out the contradictory courses of Mr. Wilson's policies. First, "too proud to fight," he suddenly declared to a number of New York ministers, "I would enjoy a fight."

"And what would Lincoln say to the candidacy of Woodrow Wilson for President?" Mr. Patterson asked. "Would Lincoln vote for the man who has failed in the crisis; the man who has not measured up to the situation? Would Lincoln vote for the coward of the railroad strike settlement?"

Mr. Patterson dwelt on Mr. Hughes' record, the present war prosperity, and the weak child labor law passed by the Democrats. He also spoke of the relation of Progressives to Republicans.

"T. R. is a Republican today," he declared. "He was never really anything but a Republican. He was a little ahead of his party, but the party has now caught up to him."

Mr. Keegan's address was forceful and intense. He criticized the administration from every angle, and enumerated the many flops of Woodrow Wilson. "The secret of Wilson's policy," he said, "is that he has no policy."

Reading from the Democratic platform, Mr. Keegan denounced the plank which vaguely charges foreign born citizens with conspiracy. "I consider that an insult to every foreign-born citizen of the United States," said Mr. Keegan. "If the Democrats have any information showing the existence of such a conspiracy, they are traitors if they do not make the information public. But to make these general charges, without specification, is, I say, an insult."

The Adamson law was the subject of an attack by Mr. MacQuarrie, who explained very clearly how the railroad men have been "gold-bricked." Mr. MacQuarrie also exposed Wilson as being unfriendly to labor.

Attorney Smiley spoke briefly of various phases of the international situations which have arisen during the Wilson administration. He recommended that a man who can be relied upon be put in the White House for the next four years.

TWO RALLIES TONIGHT.

Two Republican rallies are to be held tonight, one at Star Junction, the other at Oliver No. 1. The meetings held to date have been very successful, and it is expected that the final meetings of the campaign will surpass all the former ones.

The meetings tonight will be good ones, and that they will be largely attended is certain. At Star Junction Congressman R. F. Hopwood, D. W. Henderson, H. K. MacQuarrie and Joseph W. Ray, Jr., will speak. At Oliver No. 1, Clerk of Courts Richard Davis, James J. Keegan, A. H. Cowan and Jay Johns will present the arguments for the election of Mr. Hughes.

Tomorrow evening there will be a great demonstration in Brownsville, and on Saturday evening meetings at Point Marion and Arnold City.

NEGRO VISITOR HAS A DAY OF BAD LUCK

Jealousy Over His Social Standing, He Says, Started Trouble Which Landed Him in Lockup.

Yesterday was one of bad luck for Matthew Dailey, colored, who was given a hearing in police court this morning. Dailey blew in from Madison, Wisconsin, and was securing men to work for a company which he represents. Going to a boarding house here, he came in contact with some negroes who, he said, were jealous of his social position and his high rating in the business world. For no other reason than this, these negroes, Dailey says, borrowed his knife and then cut him up with it.

After Dailey had been slashed, he came to the city hall to put a detective on the trail of the men who used him so roughly. There he was arrested by Patrolman Daugherty and charged with drunkenness. Alderman Colborn, who presided at police court this morning, discharged Dailey.

Charles Hospeckwhite of Wheeler, who was released from the county jail at Uniontown yesterday, celebrated his new freedom by getting drunk and then going to sleep in the West Penn waiting room. He will work three days on the streets.

J. L. Moreland of South Connellsville, charged with being drunk, was given 20 days in the county jail. Lewis Singer of Nant-y-Glo, a crippled pencil seller, charged with drunkenness, was discharged on promise to get out of town at once. Eighteen prisoners in all, were given hearings this morning.

He was met at the station by Colonel Edward M. House and Vance C. McCormick, chairman of the Democratic national committee. With him they motored to the New York Yacht Club pier and boarded the Mayflower for a political conference.

FRANK HUSTON IS DEAD; STRICKEN WHILE DRESSING

Town's Oldest Druggist Succumbs Suddenly at Uniontown Home.

HIS HEALTH HAD BEEN FAILING

Had Been in Business on Main Street for the Past 45 Years and Was Widely Known Throughout This Section; Started in Drug Store With Brother.

Frank Huston, aged 66 years, Connellsville's oldest druggist, dropped dead at his home in Uniontown shortly after 8 o'clock this morning.

Although Mr. Huston had been in failing health for some time, he had not seemed seriously ill and was at all times able to attend to his duties. This morning, about 8 o'clock, he arose and began dressing himself for the day. While sitting in a chair, putting on his shoes, he suddenly lurched forward and fell over an arm of the chair.

A few minutes later Mrs. Huston entered the room to call him to breakfast and found him lying in the chair. She immediately summoned Dr. L. S. Gaddis. He found Mr. Huston had died instantly.

Mr. Huston was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Huston of Uniontown, and was born in the old Huston residence in Church street, that city. He received his early schooling in Uniontown and later attended Washington & Jefferson College. After his college days he returned to Uniontown and started to learn the drug business in the pharmacy of his brother, Samuel Huston.

In October, 1871, Mr. Huston opened a pharmacy of his own in the Morton property on Main street, Connellsville. For some years afterward he resided in Connellsville. For 45 years he conducted what came to be known as the leading drug store of this section of Western Pennsylvania, considered as a drug store in the strict sense of the term. Mr. Huston clung to the idea that a drug store was primarily for the sale of drugs and chemicals and the making up of prescriptions. The old style fixtures installed when the store was new still remain. One thing the store did make a specialty of besides drugs, and that was stationery. Notebooks, diaries, ledgers and other blank books were supplied. One county business man religiously came to Huston's store to buy a diary of a style he said he never could secure anywhere else. For 37 years he bought his diaries there.

Huston's drug store of Connellsville carried the most complete stock of drugs of any store in this section for many years. Recently, however, Mr. Huston became involved in financial difficulties and his stocks were allowed to run out. His lease on the Morton Building would have expired next year and it is believed by his intimate friends that he planned to remain in business until that time and then retire.

Recently C. Roy Hetzel, who was manager of the local store for about 11 years, resigned to go into business for himself. For several weeks, Mr. Huston himself conducted the store. He was down yesterday and closed the store, as was his custom no matter what the occasion, at 9 o'clock in time to catch his car for Uniontown. Persons who greeted him yesterday remarked that he did not seem quite himself. The Huston store clung tenaciously to the rule of closing entirely on Sundays, except to fill emergency prescriptions.

Mr. Huston was a brother of Henry Huston, a pioneer lumber dealer here. For a time Henry Huston occupied the store on Main street, conducting a clothing store. In 1881 Frank Huston took over the Huston pharmacy in Uniontown and continued to operate it until a few years ago when the property in which it was located was sold and the store discontinued.

With the exception of the 10 years, between 1871 and 1881, Mr. Huston spent virtually the whole of his life in Uniontown. In 1882 he was married to Miss Elizabeth Johnston, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Johnston of Connellsville, and went to housekeeping in a house that he had built at the corner of Ben Lomond street and North Mount Vernon avenue, Uniontown.

The deceased is survived by two sisters, Mrs. J. G. Johnston of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Ellen Beeson of Uniontown; his wife, and four children, Mrs. Robert S. Skemp of Fairchance, Mrs. Frank O. Willcox of Butte, Montana, William Huston of Monessen, and Miss Elizabeth Huston, at home. For the past several weeks Mrs. Willcox had been visiting at the home of her parents, but left for home last Thursday. William Huston arrived in Uniontown today from Monessen after returning from the border with the Tenth Pennsylvania Infantry about two weeks ago.

Mr. Huston was a brother-in-law of Mrs. J. M. Reid of Connellsville and of Alex Johnston of Butte, Montana. Mrs. Reid left for Uniontown as soon as she received word of Mr. Huston's death.

Compensation Claims.

To October 7th there had been filed with the Workmen's Compensation Board a total of 6,958 claims.

THE SOUTH IN THE SADDLE.

With a population of 20,000,000, one-fifth of the country's people; with a wealth of $250,000,000,000, one-seventh of the total; with a membership in the the House of Representatives of only ninety-seven out of a total of 435, the South, under the present Democratic Administration, is governing the remainder of the country.

Southern men are chairmen of seventeen out of eighteen great House Committees. These committees including Ways and Means, which arrange the Tariff, are dominated by Southerners.

Revenues of the eight Southern States that control these seventeen committees amount to $53,000,000 a year. The annual revenue of the State of New York alone is more than $101,000,000.

The South governs, appropriates, and spends the peoples' money.

President Wilson is southern by birth and sympathies. Five members of his Cabinet, Secretary Daniels, Secretary McAdoo, Secretary Houston, Postmaster General Burleson, and Attorney General Gregory are southerns.

The Democratic party is a sectional party. It is southern. This party, representing a small section, is governing the whole United States.

Do you wish this condition to continue?

If you desire to see all sections of the country have an equal voice in legislation and government of the United States you will vote the Republican ticket next Tuesday.

FRANCIS FEEHAN DENOUNCES BILL

Declares Labor Leaders Broke Own Rules in Supporting the Adamson 8-Hour Law.

Special to The Courier.

PITTSBURG, November 2.—Francis Feehan, former president of the miners' union, and one of the ten big figures in organized labor, featured the local campaign last night by appearing on the stump as Republican rallies in Braddock, where he declared that the Adamson law was contrary to the principles of the American Federation of Labor, and that, as a union man, he would have been obliged to keep his pledge and vote against the measure if he had been in Congress.

On the platform with Congressman Coleman at Braddock Carnegie Hall, Mr. Feehan said, during his speech:

"President Gompers and James Duncan, vice president of the American Federation are committed through the constitution of the American Federation of Labor, and through their own frequently expressed views, in favor of keeping the adjustment of wages and hours of labor out of the realm of legislation, and in the hands of labor itself, to be adjusted through collective bargaining.

"If I had been in Mr. Coleman's place I would have voted against the Adamson bill; as he did, and I would feel I would be acting in accordance with my pledge as a union man to uphold the principles of the Federation of Labor."

Bricklayers for Laurence & Critchfield today started laying the face bricks on the east wing of the new high school building. Enough bricks were set to give an idea of the exterior appearance of the structure and there were many favorable comments heard about it.

The face bricks are a rough tapestry type of varied colors, running from purple to buff. Dark chocolate colored mortar is used with them.

The contractors on the Crawford school are now laying some of the fireproof floors, the construction work having been held up by delay in the delivery of some of the structural steel.

25 CENTS DESTROYS YOUR DANDRUFF AND STOPS FALLING HAIR

Save Your Hair! Make It Thick, Wavy and Beautiful—Try This.

Thin, brittle, colorless and scraggy hair is mute evidence of a neglected scalp; of dandruff—that awful scurf.

There is nothing so destructive to the hair as dandruff. It robs the hair of its lustre, its strength and its very life; eventually producing a feverishness and itching of the scalp, which if not remedied causes the hair roots to shrink, loosen and die—then the hair falls out fast. A little Danderine tonight—now—any time—will surely save your hair.

Get a 25-cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter, and after the first application your hair will take on that life, lustre and luxuriance which is so beautiful. It will become wavy and fluffy, and have the appearance of abundance, an incomparable gloss and softness; but what will please you most will be after just a few week's use, when you will actually see a lot of fine, downy hair—new hair—growing all over the scalp.—Adv.

GREAT BATTLE ON GRIDIRON

Verdun Will Have Nothing on the Freshman-Sophomore Engagement This Afternoon.

Fayette Field will be the scene of a battle this afternoon, in point of importance with which Verdun, Gettysburg and even Waterloo fade to the significance of mere scrimmages. Promptly at 4:15 the Freshman football team of the high school, captained by Fred Port, will line up against the Sophomores, captained by Kirk Dilworth. The Freshmen have been primed for the battle by A. O. Stone, former All-Southern end, and the Sophomores by A. E. Woodhead, former Clark University star.

The lineup includes brothers of famous high school stars. Paul Daniels, tackle on the Freshman team, is a brother of Fred Daniels, tackle on the present varsity; Jones of the Freshman is a brother of Clyde Jones, former varsity captain and now a star at State; Edward Harry, Freshman quarterback, is a brother of Walter Harry, varsity sub quarter, and Fred Port, Freshman captain, is a brother of Harold Port, noted in high school football history. The lineup will be:

PETITION FREELY SIGNED

Effort for Direct Brownsville Service is Being Pushed Hard.

A large number of names have been signed to the petitions circulated here asking for train service over the Pittsburg & Lake Erie to Brownsville, via the Whitsett cutoff. One merchant who is enthusiastic about the proposition has alone secured nearly 300 names.

Practically the entire population of Perryopolis has expressed its desire for the new service, judging by the number of signers of the petition circulated in that town. The campaign for names has closed there and the Perryopolis people are ready to present their petition to the railroad officials.

The papers from all the towns interested in the direct-to-Brownsville line must be presented before the schedule meeting which will be held on November 16.

FINE HALLOWE'EN CELEBRATION HELD IN THE MILL TOWN

Parade One of the Finest Ever Held in Scottdale, the General Verdict.

LOTS OF MUMMERS ARE OUT

Costumes Range From the Usual Clowns and the Like to Clever Conceits and Satires Upon Present Day Conditions: Fire Department a Hit.

Scottdale's Hallowe'en celebrations have always had the reputation of being the finest held in this section and after the parade and jollification last night this reputation was much enhanced. The 1916 celebration will go on record as among the best ever held in the old town, both in point of crowds and the originality of mummers' costumes.

The town had been prettily decorated for the occasion which was postponed from Tuesday night because of the thunderstorm. Strings of red and blue electric lights were suspended across the streets of the business section. Side streets along the route of parade had been roped off to keep traffic from mingling with the crowds. The parade, like all parades, was late starting but it was well worth waiting for. Led by the Grand Army Band it extended in close formation for over a mile, the Scottdale Fire Department with its three fine-looking pieces of motor apparatus bringing up the rear. Three other bands and two drum corps as well as several calithumpian bands were also in line.

There was everything the mind could conceive of in the line of costumes from Mutt and Jeff, Mrs. Pickleweight, Fatty Felix and other comic section characters down to the usual clowns, hoboes, colored men and the like. About a dozen Connellsville girls, dressed in gay-colored Chinese costumes, attracted much attention. The single float in line was a bag hay wagon drawn by six horses and containing a score or more mummers. Two big searchlights were mounted on the front.

A satire on the high cost of living was presented by a man dressed as a woman, wheeling a pushcart of children, poorly dressed and apparently destitute. A sign declared this condition to be "A result of the high cost of living." Bystanders admitted there was more truth than a little bit in it.

There were any number of excellent male and female impersonations.

Announcement of the prize-winners will be made when the successful mummers have claimed their awards.

The committee in charge deserves much credit for the celebration was well managed. The order was excellent, thanks to efficient policing and the freedom from rowdyism.

SILL SAYS HE FLIRTED WITH GRAVE A YEAR

Pittsburg Man Frequently Fainted and Had to be Taken to Hospital.

"I'll tell you the truth, if I know this Tanlac was not going to be sold any more, I would try to buy every bottle on that counter over there before I left here today," said W. J. Sill at the drug store in Pittsburg, Pa., where Tanlac, the celebrated preparation, is being introduced. Mr. Sill, it might be mentioned, lives at 1206 Magnolia Street, North Side, and is connected with the New York Dye Works, at 628 Penn avenue, in this city.

"Before I began taking it," he continued, "I weighed many pounds less than I ever weighed. Today, I got on the scales and tipped them 10 pounds more than I have weighed in 12 months or more. That's exactly what two bottles of Tanlac did for me. Just look at me. I'm filling these trousers rapidly.

"About two years ago I commenced having stomach trouble and it kept getting worse until I began having regular attacks of acute indigestion, when these attacks came on me, and they were usually accompanied by nervous spells and dizziness, I would just swell up out of all proportions and become as limp as a rag. My breath would get short and my pulse so weak I was afraid my heart would stop beating. I have become unconscious on the street numerous times and have had to be taken to the hospital. I tell you I was flirting with my grave, and would have been in it if it hadn't been for Tanlac."

Tanlac is now sold in Connellsville exclusively by the Connellsville Drug Co., where the premier preparation can be had.

Tanlac can also be secured in Dunbar at D. C. Eason's Drug Store.—Adv.

At the Theatres

SOISSON THEATRE.

"A MATRIMONIAL MARTYR."—In Ruth Roland and Andrew Arbuckle, the two players featured in "A Matrimonial Martyr," the five part Gold Rooster play made by Balboa and treated to the exquisite process of Pathecolor in the Pathe Company's Paris laboratories, we see the rarity of screen art—actors physically and temperamentally in accord with their parts. In the dual role of Erma Desmond and Mrs. Hugo Stanley, Ruth Roland is happy. The play calls for her happiness only as Erma Desmond, but Ruth's volatile temperament revels happily in her interpretation of the irascible, waspish termagant, Mrs. Hugo Stanley; for her chameleon feelings conduce to making each part more real for contrast with the other. Miss Roland first won the admiration of countless screen enthusiasts by her consistent playing in the now famous "Who Pays?" series, released by Pathe about a year ago. A native daughter of California, which has produced so many favorites of the stage and screen, Miss Roland has been before the public since she was four years old. After finishing her education in Hollywood, she had considerable stock experience and wound up in vaudeville, before going into pictures. She joined the Balboa forces about a year and a half ago and rose rapidly. Only recently she made a great success in "The Red Circle" serial, and in the Gold Rooster play, "Comrade John," wherein she co-starred with William Elliott. Herbert Rawlinson and Agnes Vernon are starred in the two reel Victor comedy drama, "Main 4400" A novelist goes crazy to marry her in spite of circumstances. "Are You an Elk?" a Laemmle drama with King Baggot. "The Gold Band," a Rex drama. Tomorrow, "A Fool's Paradise," a society drama in six reels with Christine Mayo. "The Grip of Eirl" featuring Jackie Saunders. Don't forget to send the children to the Saturday morning matinee to see Napoleon and Sally.

THE PARAMOUNT.

"THE PAWNSHOP"—With Charlie Chaplin, the famous comedian, ably supported by Edna Purviance, in the leading role, and "The Manager of the B. & A." are today's feature attractions. In "The Pawnshop," Charlie Chaplin is a clerk in a pawnshop owned by the father of the girl with whom he is in love. Rand, also employed in the shop is jealous because Edna prefers Charlie, and they constantly pick at each other and fight. Campbell comes to the shop ostensibly to pawn an umbrella. He finds no one attending to the front of the store and makes a move as though to steal the cash register. He is stopped by Edna's entrance but is not discovered. In the meantime a fight between Charlie and Rand is going on in the kitchen. Charlie aims at Rand with a rolling pin but instead hits the pawnbroker just as he is entering the room. Charlie, the half million dollar man, as in the last of his comedies appears in his own famous makeup, the feet, the baggy trousers, the famous mustache and the ridiculous hat. The acting in "The Manager of the B. & A." is excellent and with the interesting story, with a punch in it, the picture is meeting with wonderful success. The exteriors are well chosen and the photography is unusually clear. Even though featuring Helen Holmes, it is strictly speaking, a man's picture. Leo Maloney in the character of Dan Oakley, the new manager is the whole works and is ably supported by Thomas G. Lingham in the heavy role as Griffith Ryder, labor leader and editor of the town paper. TO CHECK MIGRATION

Southern Towns Trying to Curtail Movement of Negroes to the North.

Drastic ordinances are being adopted by towns and cities in practically every southern state looking to curtailing the negro immigration to the north.

Alabama, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi and Georgia all have laws which prohibit the "enticing of labor" and imposes licenses upon those engaged in hiring labor. Some of the states have laws which prevent a labor agent from removing labor out of the state.

Thousands of plantation negroes are moving northward. Public works are short handed, farms operated by negro tenants are being depopulated and the labor outlook in certain sections of the south is far from encouraging.

ITCHING BURNING WATER BLISTERS

On Little Girl's Head: A Terrible Sight. Little Boy Broken Out Over Body. Awake Nights.

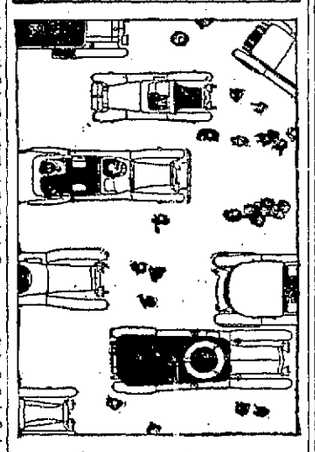

HEALED BY CUTICURA SOAP AND OINTMENT

"My little girl's trouble began by her head coming out in small water blisters, and when they would burst, wherever the water would touch, it would form a sore part and there would soon be a scale on it, and so on until the whole head was a terrible sight. My little boy was affected with the trouble and in a few days was broken out all over his body. My daughter was annoyed very much and my little boy was continually scratching. They had the trouble a month and it was very bad, itching and burning and they both lay awake nights.

"Remembering what Cuticura Soap and Ointment had done for my two other children I made up my mind to try them. In six weeks they were entirely healed." (Signed) Mrs. Thomas Bobb, 330 Hillside Ave., Edwardsville, Pa., Oct. 20, 1915.

RUNNING TO FORM.

Bruce Foster Sterling Democratic candidate for Congress is running to form He is not saying anything Sterling's political methods are modeled after the silent ones He is a Gumshoe Statesman It is even hinted that he whispers orders to his handful of loyal henchmen He is a firm believer in the Wilson brand of Pitiless Publicity, which is no publicity at all

The fact is if reports are true, the Sterling campaign is one in which money does the talking Politicians say a flood of it is being scattered judiciously over the Twenty-Third district. If money can win, Sterling will bring home the bacon

Where the money comes from is not hard to conjecture Sterling and A Mitchell Palmer dictator of the Reorganizers before his elevation to the bench, are the original Barefoot Boys Vance C. McCormick Democratic national chairman, completes the triumvirate which has dominated Pennsylvania's Democracy since Woodrow Wilson took over the national party and made a one-man affair of it It is only natural that Mr McCormick should be interested in seeing his political associate sent to Washington, and that as chairman of the Democratic National Committee he has quite a bit to say as to where the money may go

The result—the flooding of the district with money—is typical of the present Democratic organization It is a one-man affair in which selfishness is supreme Just as Woodrow Wilson has become the Democratic party in the nation so have his servile adherents taken it upon themselves to place individual ambition above party welfare Sterling, as official patronage distributor of this district under the Wilson regime has been careful to keep all of the fat jobs and most of the lean ones within the limits of his official family

Sterling's management of Democratic affairs in Fayette is only one of the reasons the voters next Tuesday will return Robert Freeman Hopwood to Congress.

A TRIFLE LATE.

After the enforced enactment of the so-called eight-hour law the prediction was freely made that other demands would be made in the matter of settling wage demands by the Wilsonian method It is rather surprising, though, that the first suggestion of a movement of this kind should come, not from the labor organizations but from a gathering of school teachers

At the Berks county institute some days ago Reuben Post Halleck, a Kentucky author and lecturer, during one of his addresses dwelt at length on the subject of teachers wages Applying the Wilson-Adamson principle of adjusting wage demands this advocate of higher wages and shorter hours for teachers declared that every teacher should receive double their present salary and be required to work no more than five hours a day To bring about this desirable result he would have the teachers form a union through which they would be able to secure their demands according to officially approved methods

He pointed out that the railroad men got their so-called eight-hour day by threatening to tie up the nation's transportation systems Having already yielded with alacrity, if not with gracefulness Washington could again be alarmed and prodded into action in the same way by a concerted effort on part of the school teachers A nation-wide educational tieup would in the judgment of this supporter of strong-arm measures be as ominous as a general railway strike

The suggestion comes a trifle late however It would not be possible to convene Congress and enact a five-hour day law for teachers before election After election such questions will have but little interest and still less significance to those in Washington who were so eager to consider them some months ago.

"Just as soon" Candidate Wilson said yesterday, "as our political parties are used for partisan objects they become a menace to the public peace and an obstacle to the selection of policy" From the day of his inauguration President Wilson has used his party for the very purposes he condemns and to such an extent that it has not only become a menace to the public peace but threatens the very integrity of our free institutions Fortunately for our country the means are available and the time near at hand when the menace will be removed

BUNK.

Bunk is a form of salve which is spread in thick layers on the common people whenever somebody wants to break into office

Every four years we start out in January to elect a President and several thousand pulpitting party workers, including the unobstructive and nimble-footed second-class postmaster and in order to do this successfully the Bunk factories are set to working in three eight-hour shifts This bunk is prepared with the utmost care by experts who are not over 99 per cent biased after which it is worked up into boiler plate and stump speeches and fed in copious lobs to the spellbound voter If all the bunk which is distributed every Presidential year could be gathered up together in one compact lump it wouldn't leave breathing room for a gnat

Bunk is a valuable asset in many quarters aside from politics however Here many trustful young wives whose husbands have come tremblingly home at 3 o'clock in the morning have been disarmed by a fluent flow of rhetorical bunk couched in the key of some well known gospel hymn? One of the greatest disappointments in life is a keen far-seeing wife who refuses to respond to a carefully thought out line of apologetic bunk and insists on verifying her husband's story over the telephone

Refused to be bored by a carefully thought-out line of apologetic bunk

Bunk is said to be derived from buncombe but in reality it is derived from the air and can travel thousands of miles without anything else to hold it up One of the best samples of pure and unadulterated bunk is in the campaign roorback, which covers more ground and is harder to overtake than a Russian army corps in full retreat

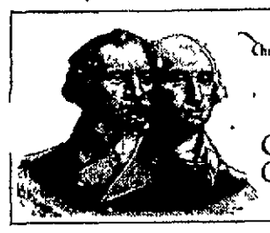

Flattery is a kind of bunk which is spread on with the cut-out open It leaves a soothing effect and can be applied with a mop, but one cent of old-fashioned sincerity will last several times as long

The Boundary Dispute Brings Forth Rival Proclamations

The participation by Virginia troops exclusively in the war against the Indians, known as Dunmore's War lent new interest in the Western country to the boundary question The Virginians naturally took the occasion to urge their claims the stronger and these assumed such importance that Lord Dunmore, leader in person of the armed forces of his colony gave recognition to them in the form of an official proclamation which he issued from Fort Pitt, or Fort Dunmore as the Virginians had renamed it, while the royal governor was proceeding on his campaign The proclamation was as follows

A PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS the rapid settlement made on the west side of the Alleghany Mountains by his Majesty's subjects within the course of these years has become an object of real concern to his Majesty's interest in this quarter And whereas the province of Pennsylvania have unduly laid claim to a very valuable and extensive quantity of his Majesty's territory and the executive part of that government in consequence thereof has most arbitrarily and unwarrantably proceeded to abuse the laudable advancements in this part of his Majesty's dominions by many oppressive and illegal methods in the discharge of this imaginary authority And whereas the ancient claim laid to this country by the colony of Virginia founded in reason upon pre occupancy and the general acquiescence of all persons together with the instructions I have lately received from his Majesty's servants ordering me to take this country under my administration and as the evident injustice manifestly offered to his Majesty by the immediate strides taken by the proprietors of Pennsylvania in prosecution of their wild claims to this country demand an immediate remedy I do hereby in his Majesty's name require and command all his Majesty's subjects west of the Laurel Hill to pay a due respect to this my proclamation strictly prohibiting the execution of any act of authority on behalf of the Province of Pennsylvania at their peril in this country but on the contrary that a due regard and entire obedience to the laws of his Majesty's colony of Virginia under my administration be observed to the end that regularity may ensue and a just regard to the interest of his Majesty in this quarter as well as to the subjects in general may be the consequence Given under my hand and seal at Fort Dunmore Sep 17 1774

By His Excellency's Command
God Save the King

The publication of Governor Dunmore's proclamation promptly brought forth from Governor Penn of the Province of Pennsylvania the following formal rejoinder

By the Honorable John Penn Esquire Governor and Commander in Chief of the Province of Pennsylvania and counties of New Castle Kent and Sussex on Delaware

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas I have received information that his Excellency the Earl of Dunmore governor general in and over his Majesty's colony of Virginia, hath lately issued a very extraordinary proclamation setting forth (here is recited the substance of Governor Dunmore's proclamation of the 17th of September) And whereas although the western limits of the province of Pennsylvania have not been settled by any authority from the Crown yet it has been sufficiently demonstrated by lines accurately run by the most skilful artists that not only a great tract of country west of the Laurel Hill but Fort Pitt also are comprehended within the charter bounds of this province a great part of which country has been actually settled and is now held under grants from the proprietaries of Pennsylvania and the jurisdiction of this government has been peaceably exercised in that quarter of the country till the late strange claims set up by the Earl of Dunmore in behalf of his Majesty's colony of Virginia founded as his Lordship is above pleased to say in reason pre-occupancy and the general acquiescence of all persons In justice therefore to the proprietaries of the province of Pennsylvania who are desirous to secure their own undoubted property from the encroachment of others I have thought fit with the advice of the council to issue this my proclamation hereby requiring all persons west of Laurel Hill to retain their settlement as aforesaid made under this province and to pay due obedience to the laws of this government and all magistrates and other officers who hold commissions or offices under this government to proceed as usual in the administration of justice without paying the least regard to the said recited proclamation until his Majesty's pleasure shall be known in the premises at the same time strictly charging and enjoining the said inhabitants and magistrates to use their utmost endeavors to preserve peace and good order Given under my hand and the great seal of the said province at Philadelphia the twelfth day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and seventy-four and in the fourteenth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third by the grace of God of Great Britain France and Ireland king defender of the faith and so forth

BLOODHOUND LOSES TRAIL OF THE MEN WHO ROBBED WOMAN

Police are as Yet Without a Clue to the Kiefertown Bandits.

HARD RAIN BLOTS OUT TRAIL

Farmers' Institute Will be Held in Mill Town Later in the Month and a Good Program is Arranged; Big Crowd Witnesses Hallowe'en Parade.

Special to The Courier.

SCOTTDALE, Nov. 2.—Yesterday a bloodhound was brought to Scottdale and taken to the home in Kiefertown where the negroes robbed Mrs. Mary Derosa. The dog got a scent and started out over the hill, but lost it and the officers are, now in the dark as much as ever. It was stated yesterday that had the dog been brought to Scottdale soon after the robbery that there were good chances for the thieves to be caught, but the heavy rain of Wednesday night had much to do with being unable to track the thieves. Mrs. Derosa was a little better yesterday. Scottdale people are very much exercised to think that so bold a robbery should be done in so thickly a populated place.

BIG CROWD GATHERS.

The crowd that gathered in Scottdale last night for the mummers' parade was almost as large as the crowd of Wednesday night. The parade was very good, there being a number of automobiles and wagons in the parade. The town was decorated as nicely as on Wednesday evening and the colored lights were lit, the downtown streets were thrown open to the mummers and all had a nice time. As practically all of the Hallowe'en celebrations in other towns were over, this gave them one more day and the mummers took advantage of it. The bands gave excellent music and the parade was one of the largest that the town has ever had. The winners of the various prizes went to the furniture and undertaking rooms of Ferguson's on Pittsburg street and received their prizes.

LEONARD STORE OPENING IS HELD

New Firm Formally Welcomes Patrons in the Remodeled Wallace Building on Main Street.

The formal opening of the Leonard Company's new furniture store in the Wallace Building in West Main street was held yesterday afternoon and evening, during which time a large crowd admired the magnificent display of furniture, representing all styles and lines, exhibited on the first and second floors. Extensive improvements have been made on the interior and exterior of the building. The most noticeable is a new front. Steps which led to the main entrance have been eliminated and replaced by a 20 foot entrance, while the display windows have been greatly enlarged, each being 20 feet deep and having a frontage of 10 feet. A new lighting system has also been installed.

In the lower display window was a handsome old fashioned American black walnut dining room suite of the William and Mary period. The other window was devoted for displaying a bedroom furniture of Adams brown mahogany of the William and Mary period. Piano or reading lamps with bright colored shades, and comfortable living room chairs upholstered in rich tapestries completed the display. A pergola on the second floor was used for displaying mahogany living room furniture upholstered in leather. Kitchen cabinets, fireless cooking ranges, bed room suites, library furniture, carpets, druggets, brass and enamel beds in many pretty effects were included in the large display.

Music was rendered in the afternoon and evening by Kiferle's orchestra. Baskets of chrysanthemums and other cut flowers were arranged throughout the store.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to banish it brought out these little olive-colored tablets.

These pleasant little tablets do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong liquids or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure the liver at the expense of the teeth? Calomel sometimes plays havoc with the gums. So do strong liquids. It is best not to take calomel, but to let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take its place.

Most headaches, "dullness" and that lazy feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "logxy" and "heavy." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. 10c and 25c a box. All druggists.

Special to The Courier.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Nov. 2.—Harry Barnhart, while hunting in the woods of Robert Smith between Mount Pleasant and Laurelville, made a most gruesome find yesterday afternoon, that of the decomposed body of a man. The skeleton was of medium size and the flesh was nearly all decayed from the bones. The remains were brought to the Reichman morgue. There was a hole in the skull showing a fractured skull, which led them to think of foul play. On the body had been canvas trousers, a black sateen shirt and heavy grain working shoes of a good kind. The feet had been wrapped in rags and the man had worn suspenders. There was no hat or coat. Twenty-three cents were found in his pockets. The case was reported to James Harkins, who looked after the body. There was no clew as to who it might have been.

Everyone Should Drink Hot Water in the Morning

Wash away all the stomach, liver, and bowel poisons before breakfast.

To feel your best day in and day out, to feel clean inside; no sour bile to coat your tongue and sicken your breath and dull your head; no constipation, bilious attacks, sick headache, colds, rheumatism or gassy, acid stomach, you must bathe on the inside like you bathe outside. This is vastly more important, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowel pores do, says a well-known physician.

To keep these poisons and toxins well flushed from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, drink before breakfast each day, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it. This will cleanse, purify and freshen the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Get a quarter pound of limestone phosphate from your pharmacist. It is inexpensive and almost tasteless, except a sourish twinge which is not unpleasant. Drink phosphated hot water every morning to rid your system of those vile poisons and toxins; also to prevent their formation.

To feel like young folks feel; like you felt before your blood, nerves and muscles became saturated with an accumulation of body poisons, begin this treatment and above all, keep it up! As soap and hot water act on the skin, cleansing, sweetening and purifying, so limestone phosphate and hot water before breakfast, act on the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels.—Adv.

BABY TOO WEAK TO CRY

Mrs. E. S. Putnam of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, writes us: "Little Baby James came to us one Friday afternoon in a most precarious condition—a sad case of malnutrition, being too weak to even cry. The doctor called and at once prescribed Thompson's Food (Peptonized).

"Sunday morning we weighed him (he was four months old, but just an infant) and he weighed six pounds. The following Sunday he was weighed again and tipped the scales at eight pounds—a gain of two pounds in one week. Began to improve immediately and was soon on the way to healthy babyhood."

This unsolicited letter is one of many that we receive from week to week.

Thompson's Food (Peptonized) is not a milk modifier, but a complete food in itself. It is very easily prepared by the mere addition of water. Its use eliminates the danger usually associated with the local milk supply.

LABOR STANDS BY REPUBLICANS

Sees Through Scheme of Wilson Leaders to Fool Voters.

TOO RAW FOR TOILERS

Single Fact That Democratic National Chairmanship is Held by Vance McCormick, a Sworn Enemy of Labor, Sufficient to Convince Workingmen of Game Being Played Merely to Gain Votes.

Philadelphia, Oct. 31.—The effort of Pennsylvania Democrats to incite labor against the Republican party is proving of little avail. Here and there men wearing Democratic buttons may be found, but it is as hard to find a Republican openly favoring the Democratic ticket as it would be to locate the needle in the proverbial haystack. On the other hand, a number of leading Democrats are out in the open for Mr. Hughes, and do not care who knows it, because they feel that their reasons are sufficient to justify the stand they are taking.

Wilson politicians in this state are finding the task of making converts to their cause a difficult one. Somehow, the people with whom they are coming in contact and whose support they are endeavoring to secure, fail to enthuse over any proposition having to do with supporting the Democratic ticket. The game is too apparent to fool the intelligent laboring man. He realizes that all the moves of President Wilson lately have been actuated by the fact that he is a candidate for re-election and that he lacks the slightest friendship toward the cause of labor.

Then, again, the personnel of the Wilson organization is not such as to give encouragement to any laboring man, who, under ordinary circumstances, might be inclined to support the candidacy of President Wilson. With Vance McCormick holding the chairmanship of the Democratic National Committee, labor men are not disposed to go into high glee over any promises that may be made by the candidate for president, or even rejoice over past performances, lest it may turn out that such performances contain snares and goldbricks insofar as assisting the lot of the toiler.

As one prominent labor man stated the other day, "No candidate for president can be a friend of organized labor and at the same time pick Vance McCormick as the manager of his campaign."

The spectacle of Vance McCormick, who is perhaps the greatest enemy of organized labor in the United States, running the campaign of President Wilson, who claims to be the greatest friend of organized labor in the United States, is good enough material for a vaudeville sketch. McCormick, the union hater, and Wilson, the union lover, (for political campaign only), walking arm in arm down the campaign path, and each believing he is fooling the public, presents a picture unique anything that has ever appeared in national politics.

When a candidate for governor, two years ago, McCormick was vigorously opposed by organized labor. He was shown to be the opponent and enemy of the men who bind themselves together in an effort to better their condition. The day he purchased the Harrisburg Patriot he made the plant a non-union one, although up until his assuming ownership it carried the union label. While Mayor of Harrisburg, McCormick's entire administration seemed to be opposed to the men who toil for a living, and it will be recalled that he vetoed an ordinance increasing the pay of workingmen fifteen cents, because he believed that $1.35 was sufficient for certain city employes.

It was these revelations of two years ago that brought about the defeat of McCormick for governor of Pennsylvania, and the fact that he now again appears in the limelight as the political manager of the man who claims that he is a friend of labor gives the situation an appearance that is both ridiculous and amusing.

Views Are Similar.

Of course, it might happen that President Wilson is really a friend of labor and named McCormick as his manager to secure for him the support of enemies of labor, McCormick representing, as he does, a class of people that never had anything in common with the man who works for a living. But past actions of Mr. Wilson demonstrate that he is no more of a friend of the laboring man than McCormick. Before he became a candidate for president, he never hesitated about expressing his real feelings on the question of organized labor, and these sentiments are now coming back to haunt him in his quest for re-election with the aid of the labor man.

In addressing the graduating class of Princeton, on June 3, 1909, Mr. Wilson said, "You know what the real standard of the laborer is in our day. It is to give as little as he may for his wages." Again, Wilson said at a dinner in the Waldorf Hotel, New York, on March 18th, 1907, "We speak too exclusively of the capitalistic class. There is another as formidable an enemy of equality and freedom and opportunity as it is, and that is the class formed by the labor organizations of the country."

Mr. Wilson, once more proving himself a foe to organized labor, declares in his "History of the American People" that "the Chinese were more to be desired as workmen, if not as citizens, than most of the coarse crew that come crowding in every year at the eastern ports." This vicious assault upon the honest and hard-handed immigrant from all over the world is too plain to require any more comment than to quote his own words. Organized labor at present is made up largely of these former immigrants, and Wilson's words naturally are an insult to an army of decent citizens. At another time President Wilson said that he was a fierce partisan of the open shop.

New Proofs Daily.

Each recurring day brings additional proof of Mr. Wilson's hostility to labor in all its branches. Late last week, certain correspondence between Mr. Wilson, then Princeton University president, and Edward R. Laverty, a member of the New York Trades Union, was made public. Mr. Laverty, it seems, inquired if Mr. Wilson had been correctly reported in the public prints in attacking labor unions. Replying, Mr. Wilson said, among other things, that what he said against trade unions was said because he was able to cite cases in verification of his statements. Along this line, he made the assertion that bricklayers working on jobs in New York spent about one-third of the working day sitting around smoking their pipes and chatting, and that they did this because they had laid the number of bricks to which they were limited for the day by the union to which they belonged. Mr. Wilson concluded with the statement that he has enough evidence to sufficiently convince him of the general truth of his allegation.

These few examples are sufficient to prove that at heart Mr. Wilson and Mr. McCormick belong in the same political bed. The only difference is that Mr. McCormick, who is managing Mr. Wilson's campaign, has not declared his friendship for workingmen since he ceased running for office two years ago, while Wilson, who is running for office, is putting in many days at present patting the workingman on the back.

Hughes Real Friend of Labor.

The men who toil for a living in Pennsylvania realize that the Republican party has done more in the matter of constructive labor legislation than all the other parties combined. They also know that the Republican candidate for president, Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, is a genuine friend of labor and proved such while occupying the chair of Governor of New York. Since New York state was created in 1777, there have been only 162 labor laws enacted during that long period of time. Of these 162 laws, fifty-six, or exactly one-third, went upon the statute books during Governor Hughes' term of three years and nine months. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that labor newspapers of New York state have extolled the Republican candidate for president for his friendship to the cause of labor and commend him to all who desire in the White House a considerate and sympathetic upholder of human rights.

Before he ever thought of seeking the presidency, Mr. Hughes, in speaking of organized labor, said, "There are some who revile organized labor as a source of strife and a menace to trade; I regard it as a fine opportunity for the improvement of the condition of the working man." At another time Mr. Hughes said, "The mission of the labor organization is one of the finest that any association of men could guard; the interests of labor are the interests of all the people, and the protection of the wage earner in the security of his life and health by every practical means is one of the sacred trusts of society."

Under these circumstances, it is not hard to guess how the workingmen of Pennsylvania are going to vote on November 7. There may be some states in the Union where the real attitude of Mr. Wilson and his campaign manager, Mr. McCormick, is not known, but here in Pennsylvania, labor voters are able to separate the wheat from the chaff, even in politics, and refuse to be blinded by the throwing of a lot of Democratic dust in the air.

This Is NOT Newton D. Baker's Idea of Washington

FROM "HISTORICAL AND TOPOGRAPHICAL GUIDE TO VALLEY FORGE," BY W. HERBERT DUBE, B. D.

"In 1777, while the American army lay at Valley Forge, a good old Quaker by the name of Potts had occasion to pass through a thick wood near headquarters. As he traversed the dark brown forest, he heard, at a distance before him, a voice which as he advanced became more fervid and interested. Approaching with slowness and circumspection, whom should he behold in a dark bower, apparently formed for the purpose, but the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United Colonies on his knees in the act of devotion to the Ruler of the universe! At the moment when Friend Potts, concealed by the trees, came up, Washington was interceding for his beloved country. With tones of gratitude that laboured for adequate expression, he adored that exuberant goodness which, from the depth of obscurity, had exalted him to the head of a great nation, and that nation fighting at fearful odds for all the world holds dear.

"He utterly disclaimed all ability of his own for this arduous conflict; he wept at the thought of that irretrievable ruin which his mistakes might bring on his country, and with the patriot's pathos spreading the interests of unborn millions before the eyes of Eternal Mercy, he implored the aid of that arm which guides the stars of heat. Soon as the General had finished his devotions and had retired, Friend Potts returned to the house, and threw himself into a chair by the side of his wife.

"'Delight Isaac!' said she with tenderness, 'thee seems agitated; what's the matter?' 'Indeed my dear,' quoth he, 'I appear agitated 'tis no more than what I am. I have seen this day what I shall never forget. Till now I have thought that a Christian and a soldier were characters incompatible; but if George Washington be not a man of God, I am mistaken, and all more shall I be disappointed if God do not through him perform some great thing for this country.'"

(Isaac Potts was then 36, having been married at the age of 20, at Plymouth Meeting, 6th December, 1770, to Martha, daughter of Samuel and Mary (Livezy) Hallum, born May 28, 1750.)

FROM REPORT OF SECRETARY OF WAR BAKER'S SPEECH AT JERSEY CITY, NEW JERSEY, OCTOBER 18

"Some people say they cannot understand the President's Mexican policy, and I want to tell you why. They have forgotten our own history and the Declaration of Independence, and the President has not forgotten either. Why are we impatient at the Mexicans? We say they do not respect the lives and property of our people. Perhaps they don't. We say they do not pay their honest debts. They don't. We say they are a ragamuffin lot. We say their money is not any good. That's true. It is only worth 3 or 3 cents on the dollar. We say they do not respect church property. That is also true.

"The amazing thing is that people never respect these things in a revolution. We had a revolution, and from the beginning to the end of that, the conditions in this country were so like Mexico that it is perfectly astounding to read.

"Washington's soldiers in the march to Valley Forge stole everything they could lay their hands on. They stole the silver vessels from the churches and melted them up to buy drink. They drove ministers of the gospel and preachers of churches out of their churches and out of the country."

BIG BOOST FOR JUDGE WALLING

Chairman Crow Asks That He Be Given Support.

CALLS ON ALL REPUBLICANS

Says That Present Jurist Is Needed on the Supreme Court Bench and Every G. O. P. Voter Should Place a Mark After His Name.

Philadelphia, Oct. 31.—A big impetus was given the candidacy of Judge Emory A. Walling for re-election to the Supreme Court last week when Republican State Chairman William E. Crow declared that the Republican organization in Pennsylvania would leave no stone unturned to bring about the success of the Erie jurist. In line with this announcement, Chairman Crow sent a personal letter to every Republican committeeman in the state, asking that Judge Walling be supported.

As is generally known, the candidates for Supreme Court judge are now being voted for on a non-partisan ballot, printed on the regular ballot. To vote for the candidate for this office, a seperate cross must be placed after the name of the person whom the voter desires to favor. Judges are now elected strictly by the non-partisan system, and no vote in the square of any party means a vote for a judge. As already stated, a seperate mark must be placed after the name of the candidate for the judgeship.

In making known his stand on this Supreme Court vacancy, Chairman Crow explained that although it is a matter outside of the Republican party, and therefore something that he, as party chairman, has no direct control over, still the office is too important to the people to be neglected by those who are this year interested in securing votes for any organization; that as chairman of the dominate party in Pennsylvania, he is glad to have the privilege of calling the attention of Republican voters to the necessity of making sure the success of Judge Walling.

Calls on All Republicans.

"Notwithstanding the fact that judges are now elected on the non-partisan basis, I do not hesitate to call upon all Republicans to give their support to Judge Emory A. Walling, of Erie, who now occupies a place on the Supreme Court bench by appointment, and who is a nominee for re-election as his own successor," said Chairman Crow yesterday. "As a member of the Fayette County Bar, I am familiar with the qualifications of Judge Walling. He is a man who stands pre-eminent in point of ability, temperament and capacity. As a common pleas judge, he won greater success than most of his colleagues on the same bench in Pennsylvania. When his appointment as supreme court judge was announced some few months ago, judges and lawyers throughout the state joined in expressions of approval, feeling that a worthy successor to Judge Elkin had been chosen. Bar associations all over Pennsylvania have endorsed Judge Walling, and this in itself should insure his election by a very large majority. But as has been shown, since the non-partisan ballot system was inaugurated, there is always the danger of forgetfulness on the part of the voters, unless strong pressure is brought to bear and constant reminding is done by political leaders in the several counties.

Means General Support.

"I am glad that I have had the privilege of saying a kind word for Judge Walling. He is needed on the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and his election will be a step toward maintaining at the highest possible standing that tribunal of justice."

The activity of the Republican state organization for Judge Walling means support in every nook and corner of the commonwealth. He will not be forgotten in the stress of the big battle of November 7, and it is believed that his majority will be overwhelming.

In this city a lawyers' campaign has been organized for Judge Walling, and it is headed by John G. Johnson, leader of the American Bar. Other noted lawyers on the committee are: William A. Glasgow, Jr., James Gay Gordon, George Wharton Pepper, Alexander Simpson, Jr., Abraham M. Beitler, Francis Shunk Brown, M. Hampton Todd, Hampton L. Carson, and S. Davis Page.

Judge Rice's Endorsement.

An endorsement of Judge Walling that is valued most highly by that jurist, as well as his friends, comes from Honorable Charles E. Rice, of Wilkes-Barre, formerly president of the Superior Court of Pennsylvania. Judge Rice served on the Superior Court from the day of its inauguration, and last year declined re-election. He is looked upon as one of the leading jurists who has sat on any bench in Pennsylvania. In speaking of Judge Walling, Judge Rice says:

"Judge Walling is in the prime of life, in good health, of unabated mental vigor, and of high personal character. His personal qualities and conduct have won for him the respect and confidence of all who know him and know of his work, without regard to party affiliations. He is learned, able, industrious, conscientious, deeply imbued with a sense of the duties and responsibilities of the judiciary office, and eminently fair-minded and free from temperamental bias.

"By his long and markedly able service as a judge he has demonstrated his fitness for the position. For these reasons I earnestly urge his election."

LITTLE TALKS ON THRIFT

By S. W. STRAUS
President American Society for Thrift

In the home should the seeds of thrift be planted. A nation cannot rise above the level of its home life, and the public life of a nation is the reflection of the home life. We should remember that the thrifty nations are the hardest to vanquish in war or in any other great crisis.

There are numerous ways in which a housewife may save, small ways, a few cents at a time, hardly worth while in the opinion of some. Many women with large families would be too proud to ask their milkmen to deliver skim milk to them and thus save a few cents, because the milkmen might think they were poor or stingy, or because they are under the impression that skim milk has little or no value. Yet it is a very economical food material. To be sure, it has lost its butterfat by being skimmed, but there are left the sugar, the mineral substances and the protein. Skim milk is classed with such food material as eggs, meat and cheese. Two quarts and a half of skim milk, at four cents a quart, contain about as much protein or energy producing substance as a pound of round steak at twenty cents a pound. Oyster stew made with skim milk is good to the taste and very nutritious.

By buying a scale and weighing her purchases, a housekeeper found that in one week, through short weights, she had lost 16 cents which means $8.32 a year. When boiling water to cook food, it would be well for the cook to remember that no matter how fast the water boils it gets no hotter and the heat used in boiling away more water than is needed is wasted. Many housewives throw away suet, which, if rendered, has the same value as lard.

What makes the city garbage contract so valuable is the great amount of fat left after refining. Analysis of raw garbage shows that grease constitutes 3.5 per cent and fertilizer ingredients 0.3 per cent. The value of a ton of raw garbage is about $5.00, the grease being worth $3.00 and the fertilizer ingredients $2.00.

It's these little things that count with the economical housewives, who really have more time to think of how they can save than their mothers did, and they should not forget to instill in their children ideas of thrift in the use of heat, light and all household commodities.

BEST MAN AT A WEDDING.

Time Was When He Used to Assist In Abducting the Bride.

Do you know why the bridegroom's attendant at the wedding is called "best man" and how he happens to be such an important factor at a society wedding? He is supposed to look after the ushers, the carriage, the wedding ring and a host of other things that the fortunate lover could not be expected to concern himself with at such a time. But there was a period in the history of the human family when the best man had other duties than these to perform. It was when there was no church ceremony and when primitive people had come to the conclusion that marriage within the tribe was not good for the race. Then it became the fashion for the young man of marriageable age to go forth in quest of a bride, the daughter of some neighboring tribe.

Perhaps the girls were not entirely unwilling to be captured, but no girl, either ancient or modern, would admit for a moment that she had wandered away from the protection of her male relatives for the actual purpose of being abducted. Even if there was no brother at hand the girl was likely to put up a game fight, and the prospective bridegroom had need of the assistance of a strong muscled friend to aid him in subduing her. There was very little to the ceremony once the girl had been taken to the home of her future lord, but the "best man" was always a honored guest in her home, especially if the marriage turned out well. In many mountainous parts of the civilized world where old customs obtain the "best man" still pretends to assist in abducting the bride.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Painting Overhead.

When it is necessary to paint a window or any object overhead the paint or liquid usually runs off the handle of the brush and then over the worker's hands. If you will take two pieces of tin soldered at the ends, says C. H. Thomas in the Popular Science Monthly and tack them on either side of the brush below the bristles, you will have a little cup which catches this overflow paint. Each time the brush is dipped into the paint can the shield is automatically emptied.

PETEY DINK—Petey Always Runs Out of Luck. By C. A. Voight

The Quarterbreed

BY ROBERT AMES BENNETT

Olana ventured to whisper to her brother that the papers did not look alike. He hastily repeated the remark to Vandervyn. The girl cringed close to her grandfather. But Vandervyn showed no anger. He smiled at her in a manner that brought a blissful glow into her soft eyes, and explained that one paper gave the proceedings of the council in full, while the other consisted of brief notes. He then murmured to her something that at first brought a shadow into her joyous face, but in the end left her radiant with happiness.

When the leading men of the tribe had signed the papers and Redbear and Olana had attested as witnesses, Vandervyn thrust the documents into his pocket and went to rejoin Hardy. As he handed over the paper that Hardy had signed, he remarked that, if there was no objection, Redbear and his sister would remain in the mountains with their grandfather until word should be received from the government for the tribal delegation to come on to Washington.

"You are ready to return to the agency with me?" asked Hardy.

"We can start at once, if you wish," assented Vandervyn.

"Very well," said Hardy. "The girl shall remain here, and you will come with me."

Vandervyn shrugged, smiled good-humoredly, and vaulted into his saddle.

Still doubtful of his companion, Hardy took the ponies of Redbear and Olana in lead, and rode over to where the brother and sister stood in the midst of their grandfather's immediate family. When the girl confirmed Vandervyn's statement that she wished to remain in the mountains, he took ceremonious leave of the noble old chief, and rode off to rejoin his party.

During the brief interval Vandervyn's gay humor had disappeared. He met Hardy with a frown, and held out one of the letters that he had written that morning. Seeing that it was addressed to himself, Hardy tore open the envelope and read the brief note within.

"So," he said, fixing the younger man with a level glance, "your resignation—to take effect at once. It is dated yesterday."

"It would have been dated and presented a week ago if I'd had the slightest idea you were going to insult me as you did yesterday," Vandervyn burst out angrily. "You'd have had it on the spot if I could have brought myself to borrow your pen and paper."

"I see," said Hardy. He reflected a moment, and remarked: "There seems to be no reason why I should not accept your resignation, if you insist upon my acting on it."

"I've Had Enough of Your Bullying."

"I do," said Vandervyn. "I've had enough of your bullying. I'm a free man now—not your clerk."

"You will change your tone, sir, if you wish to ride in my company," said Hardy, with a cool self-control that checked the other's anger.

"Gad! if only you weren't such a self-righteous prig!" exclaimed the younger man. "You're so sure you can show cards and spades to the angels! I'm out for the good things of life, and I make no bones over it. But that doesn't prevent me from being a blooming benefactor as well. If you wish to know the real reason why I'm resigning, it's because I have planned to go on to Washington with the delegation, and pull wires to get the tribe a big slice of graft for their mineral lands."

Hardy saw the frank sincerity in his companion's eyes, and responded to the assertion with an instant apology: "Mr. Vandervyn, I beg your pardon for misjudging you. At times your conduct has been ill-advised, but I no longer doubt your good intentions."

"It takes an officer and gentleman to eat crow as if it were quail!" railed Vandervyn with seemingly genial sarcasm. "Do I understand that my resignation is accepted?"

"If you insist."

"I do. Now that is settled. We make the return trip as equals," said Vandervyn, and, as if freed from all rancor by the thought, he fell into a mood of suave gayety.

CHAPTER XV.

A Lover's Promise.

When, midafternoon of the next day, the two white men and the pair of Indian police emerged from the canyon of Sioux creek into the agency valley, Vandervyn was still as gay and good-humored as at the start of the journey. He even volunteered to intervene for Hardy with Marie.

"It is very kind of you to make the offer," replied Hardy in rather a stiff tone. "If Dupont is at home, may I ask you to send him to the office?"

"Certainly," replied Vandervyn, and all the way down to the agency he chatted genially. When they came to the level behind the warehouse, he waved his hand in friendly parting. "S'long. See you later. Be sure to chop off your whiskers in time for supper. You'll need to look your best."

Dupont soon clumped into the agency office, fairly oozing with jovial friendliness.

"Howdy! Howdy, Cap!" he greeted. "Marie, she says she'll look to see you at supper. Mr. Van says you wanted to see me. Anything I can do, Cap, just call on me. I'm ready to call quits now, if you are."

Hardy accepted the proffered hand, and exchanged a cordial grip.

"This pleases me very much, Dupont," he responded. "We will all now work together for the tribe. I give you my best wishes that you may win the mine."

"We got a fair show to, seeing as how you ain't going to let on about it in your report. Now, just tell me what I can do for you."

"Merely a few words as interpreter," said Hardy. "I wish one of the police at once to ride over to the railroad with these telegrams and letters. The sooner I receive instructions to send the delegation to Washington, the better."

"That's no lie. Mr. Van says the money can't be appropriated till congress meets, but the treaty is fixed up so's the amount can be settled on and the reservation ordered divided up by the treaty commission."

"Ah!" exclaimed Hardy. "We may get the agricultural lands allotted in time for the planting of winter wheat. Come; we will send off these telegrams and letters."

Since the return of the party from the mountains, not one of the police but was more than willing to serve the new agent. Two of the younger men were soon cantering away down the valley on their best ponies, proud of the fact that they had been chosen to make the night ride to the railroad.

Hardy returned to the office with Dupont, and became deeply absorbed in discussing ways and means for the development of the Indians as farmers. When Dupont noted the hour, there seemed scarcely time for even one of the captain's quick-change toilets. Yet he appeared at the door of the Dupont house, spick and span and his beard clean shaven, without having required his hostess to wait supper half a minute.

As he entered in response to Dupont's hospitable bellow, there was a perceptible hesitancy in his manner. Marie was seated at the far end of the room near Vandervyn. She rose, and came forward to greet Hardy, her chin proudly uptilted.

"There seems to have been a general misunderstanding of motives, captain," she remarked with frank directness. "I still consider that you were unduly harsh, but I now understand that you meant well and perhaps had some excuse. Reggie says that we are all to work together for the good of the tribe."

"It pleases me very much to hear you say it."

"What interest have you in helping them?" she queried, evidently reluctant to believe his motives unselfish.

"It means a good mark on his official record," bantered Vandervyn. "Every little thing counts on promotion—like merit marks at school."

"You see!" agreed Hardy. "I can't pretend to altruism. I am ambitious to stand well in my profession. If I make a good showing when given a detail, I put merit marks on my record, as Mr. Vandervyn has so aptly expressed it."

Marie's challenging gaze softened, and she looked thoughtfully down at her white hands.

"Isn't even self-sacrifice a form of selfishness?" she murmured.

The appearance of the Indian boy in the dining room doorway checked Hardy's reply.

During supper the girl remained unusually thoughtful and silent. Hardy discussed with Dupont plans for the instruction of the tribe in agriculture. The idea had occurred to him that the government might permit him to build an irrigation system for the farming lands of the tribe, using Indian laborers, and paying for the work out of money appropriated for the sale of the mineral lands. When Vandervyn chose to listen, it was with a half-amused smile that did not always cover the underlying cynical irony. Most of the time he devoted himself to an attempt to rally Marie out of her thoughtfulness. Instead of responding, she became more pensive. Hardy attributed the girl's half-somber quietness to his presence. As they left the supper table, he asked Dupont to come to the office.

Marie and Vandervyn followed them as far as the parlor, where the young man dropped into the easiest chair, with a disgusted, "Lord! he makes me weary—all that benevolent blutter!"

"Of course he is doing it merely to help himself in his career," murmured Marie.

"Or to get the handling of the tribal funds," suggested Vandervyn. "There'll be a fat slice of graft for somebody out of all those millions."

"You really think that?"

"What else can you expect—government on one side and Poor Lo on the other? It's the usual thing. I expect to get my share."

"You?" exclaimed the girl, her eyes widening with a look of astonishment and reproach.

Vandervyn laughed amusedly. "Wait a bit before you dig up your tomahawk, Miss Sitting Bull. If I succeed in getting the tribe fifteen or twenty millions, instead of the five that was talked about, it strikes me they could afford to allow yours truly a nice little percentage as commission."

"Oh, Reggie, pardon me! Of course you should have good pay for proving yourself such a friend to the tribe."

"And to each member of the tribe," he added, his blue eyes glowing golden with ardor. "I don't want all my pay in money. How about an advance royalty in—something else?"

He had risen, and was coming toward her. She blushed and retreated around the tea table.

"No, no," she remonstrated. "I told you we must wait until—until you are freed from your—cousin."

"Wait?" he rejoined. "You're trying to play me against that tinfoil hero. Do you think I'm going to stand for that? I'll have to go on at once, and fix things so that the delegation will not have to hang 'round the capitol all winter."

"You will have to leave before the delegation?" The girl was almost dismayed at the unexpectedness of the announcement.

"I'll have to go at once," repeated Vandervyn, frowning. "I thought of course he would have told me before sending his messages. I could have so worded them for him that the game would have started off without a hitch. As it is, he has messed things up in a way that will require the presence of a good lobbyist to pull off the game in any kind of shape to suit us."

"No, We Must Wait Until You Are Freed From Your—Cousin."

"I do not like the way you speak of it—a game, lobbying," murmured Marie.

Vandervyn smiled condescendingly. "My dear girl, a crooked deal can twist through the devious ways of congress and the departments without trouble. An honest, straightforward matter, such as this treaty, needs strong pulling to get us far as the president's signature."

"But you will use only honest methods in your lobbying?"

"What else?" queried Vandervyn, his eyes wide and guileless. "I wish to earn my commission all free and above-board. You need not be surprised, however, if a big slice of graft is deducted from the amount appropriated to pay the tribe."

"How dishonest!"

"It's the only way to get the tribe a just price for their mineral lands. Don't look so shocked, Miss Canada. It's the regular way such things are handled in all representative governments—ours, the Canadian and English parliaments, the German, the French—all the same."

The girl's eyes clouded. "I do not like to hear you speak in that cynical tone."

"Oh, it's not because I don't believe in democratic government. In despotic countries the regular procedure would be for the officials to take the bulk of the appropriation, and give the tribe the percentage—or nothing."

"I cannot believe that even your government will permit its officials to rob either the tribe or the people of the country," declared Marie. "There cannot be a majority of dishonest congressmen."

"No; the big majority are honest fools. They are managed by means of committees and the plea of party loyalty and log-rolling. But that's not my fault, sweetheart. You know I—"

"I know you've yet to receive permission to call me that!" broke in the girl.

Vandervyn bit his lip. "You forget I am going away."

"Back to Washington—and your fiancee!"

"Quite true. And I'm going to stay, unless there is some inducement for me to return here," he rejoined.

It was Marie's turn to bite her lip. "How can you say that, when you know that I—that I—"

"I told you how it was, and why I cannot break off with her until—" He stepped nearer, his eyes aglow with passionate allurement. "You know I love you, only you, Marie! And you love me, sweetheart!"

Under the enticement of his soft eyes and pleading voice, all her reserve melted. Instead of eluding his advance, she swayed forward, and permitted him to take her in his arms. He crushed her to him, and showered kisses on her lips and blushing cheeks—upon her dusky hair when, overcome, she pressed her face against his shoulder.

He quivered with the joy of mastery and possession. "You are mine—mine! Say it!"

"I—I will marry you!" she whispered.

Submissive and loving as was the reply, it struck the ardent smile from Vandervyn's face. His embrace relaxed, and for a moment he stood staring over the girl's head, his lip between his teeth.

"I—love—you!" she murmured, quick to sense the change that had come upon him.

At the candid confession his eyes again glowed, and again he crushed her to him.

"You love me! You own it!" he cried. "You are mine!"

"No!"

With a sudden, violent thrust for which he was all unprepared, she burst from his clasp and sprang clear of him.

"What is it?" he muttered, staring at her, half bewildered.

"Oh!" she cried. "It was the way you—Oh! how could you?" She put up her hands, like a child, to hide the scarlet that flamed in her cheeks. "Go, please go! You have made me tell— And I have promised to marry you—when you come back."

"If I do come back," qualified Vandervyn in a flash of chagrin.

Marie drew herself up to her full height, the color ebbing from her face. Her voice was as cold as her eyes. "Do you wish to free me from my promise?"

"Never!" he burst out. "You'd give yourself to Hardy." He shan't have you. You've promised—you said it."

"Not now—not yet—not until you come back to me, free from your cousin. Leave me, I asked you to go."

When he perceived the look in her eyes, he picked up his hat and left the house without attempting to argue.

She closed the door, and hastened into her dainty little bedroom, to sink on her knees before the crucifix at the foot of her bed.

CHAPTER XVI.

The Fighting Chance.

Vandervyn was up before dawn. But Marie was up an hour earlier, and sent her father over to make sure that her lover came for the breakfast she had prepared for him. While he ate, she stocked his saddlebags for the trip, and gave the pinto a good feed of oats.

He tried to see her alone, and failed. She was too clever for him. But when he went out to mount, she permitted him a single parting kiss in the presence of her father.

Dupont had saddled one of his own ponies to "ride out" with the traveler. As they jogged down the road in the dim starlight, he bit off a "chaw" of plug tobacco, squinted at the vague form of his companion, and chuckled.

"What's the joke?" irritably queried Vandervyn.

"Takin't no joke, Mr. Van. Just the same, it tickles me to know you and Marie has agreed to hitch up."

"Who said anything about an agreement?" snapped the young man.

"Now, now, keep on your shirt!" soothed Dupont. "Marie wouldn't never have let you kiss her if she didn't intend to take you."

Vandervyn suddenly changed his tone: "I'm glad to hear you say it, Jake. You see, she does not altogether like the idea of keeping quiet about our engagement—our betrothal, you would say in Canada. But if Hardy should hear of it, he probably would notify my uncle. Then goodby mine and all."

"Um!" grunted Dupont.

"Mine and all!" repeated Vandervyn. "I've told you why. I'll fix it so we'll get the mine and maybe something else—and I'll fix Hardy!"

"Didn't know you was still so down on him. Wasn't it all smoothed over? You been acting that way."

"Wait and see me rub his fur the other way! I'll put over a game on him that—" Vandervyn checked the disclosure, and began asking questions about the traits of the five chiefs chosen as tribal delegates.

Half an hour after sunrise Dupont came jogging back home, his heavy face set in a satisfied grin. The complacency of his look lessened when he entered, and saw the Indian boy removing the evidences of someone's solitary meal. He knocked at his daughter's door. After quite a delay she called to him that he might enter. He found her seated at the foot of the bed, with a little leather-bound book in her lap. Though her eyelids were swollen, she met him with her usual look of quiet self-possession.

"You let Cap eat alone," he remarked. "Don't call that being hospitable, do you?"

"If he had been more considerate, Reggie could have remained until the delegation leaves," coldly replied the girl.

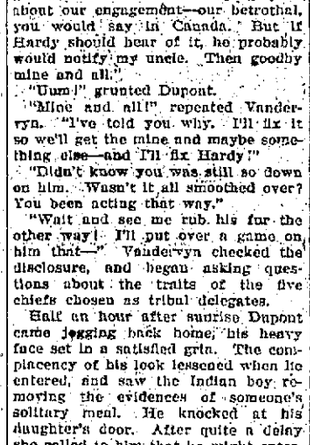

"Well, we got to keep in with him till Mr. Van gits things fixed. You see, if he gits mad and reports on us to Washington, we'll git kicked off the reservation and barred from any chance of the mine."

"Did Reggie say that?"

"Yep. It's why, he says, he leaves it to you to keep quiet about the engagement. If you let on about it to Hardy, he's likely to git jealous and put Senator Clemmer next. That would queer the whole deal at this stage of the game."

"I do not believe that Captain Hardy would do such a thing," declared the girl.

"All right. Mr. Van leaves it to you to tell him, if you want to. I ain't saying Cap mayn't be a straight-laced in everything else. But when it comes to being dead gone on a girl like you, and at his age, too—needn't tell me he won't do his level best to put Mr. Van out of the running any way he can."

The girl sprang up, her eyes afire with a flare of unreasoning anger.

"He shall not!" she cried. "Reggie is coming back!"

"He won't have no chance to if it leaks out about you and him going to git married."

"Married!" The angry scarlet of the girl's cheeks deepened to a rose. Notes of indignation and joy mingled oddly in her half-murmured prediction: "He will come back! That meddler shall not prevent!"

"You won't go and git Cap down on us, will you?" remonstrated Dupont.

"Wait and see," she replied.

When, at the usual supper hour, Hardy presented himself at the Dupont door, his bearing was reserved and somewhat diffident. Dupont, who was alone in the parlor, genially bade him enter. But Hardy lingered in the doorway until Marie appeared.

"Pardon me, Miss Dupont," he said, as he met her look of surprise. "I came to say that if you do not consider it worth while to board me, I can make shift for myself."

"Indeed, but you shall not!" exclaimed the girl with a graciousness that brought a glow into his grave face. "What should we do without your company at table?"

"You are very kind to say it."

She smiled. "Where have you been keeping yourself all day?"

"I rode up Wolf river to the falls. A canal to irrigate a large area could be led down from there, and later on I believe a dam could be constructed above the falls at a comparatively small cost. It would convert the valley above into a large storage reservoir, to hold the winter floods."

"You must show me your plans at the falls themselves!" declared Marie with an enthusiasm more gratifying to him than would have been a personal compliment.

They went in to supper, earnestly discussing his plans for the betterment of the tribe.

So began the second period of his close companionship with the girl, and the intimacy appeared as sincere and friendly as the first one, when Vandervyn was in the mountains with Redbear. Almost every day they rode out to examine the Wolf river watershed, and estimate as best they could without surveying instruments the number of acres that could be put under ditch.

Hardy had at once written for reports on similar undertakings. Before receiving them he was agreeably surprised by an official telegram from Washington instructing him to at once send on the tribal delegation, in the charge of Redbear. So swift an unreeling of government red tape proved that powerful influences were favoring the consummation of the new treaty. Hardy ungrudgingly gave Vandervyn the credit of being a very successful benevolent lobbyist.

A runner was dispatched to bring in Redbear and the delegates. They came without delay. Redbear's arm was so nearly healed that he had full use of it. Olana did not accompany him. He said their grandfather had become so fond of her that he had insisted upon her remaining in the mountains until the return of the delegation from Washington. Marie offered to send for her and give her a home while her brother was away, but Redbear hastily declared that the girl wished to stay with the old chief.

Hardy took charge of the delegation as far as the railroad, and Marie and Dupont went along to keep him company. He provided for the comfort aboard train of Redbear and the five solemn chiefs, and shipped them off with through tickets to Washington and a careful set of instructions to help them in the conduct of their mission.

"My only wish is that I might go with them," he remarked, as the "iron horse" whirled them away toward the land of the sunrise. "They will be like Babes in the Woods."

"You sure have done your level best for them, Cap," replied Dupont. "You ain't got no license to worry nohow. Mr. Van is there to boost 'em along."

"Besides, you have your work here," added Marie with a glance that completely diverted his thoughts.

They spent the night in the rough shack misnamed a hotel, and at dawn started on their return to the agency. As Dupont's pony was continually lagging behind, Hardy had the pleasure of Marie's company virtually alone for the greater part of the ride. She seemed to enjoy this quite as much as he, and remained in gracious good-humor even through the blazing heat of midday. Nor did she allow herself to feel fatigue until, after their arrival at the agency, she had cooked a savory supper, and then entertained Hardy for an hour or more in her artistic little parlor.

The next day, fresh as ever, Marie was ready to ride up to the falls and help him run a line of levels with the instruments that he had hired in town. Never had he known anyone so abounding in life. Mentally as well as physically, she seemed ever tireless, buoyant, animated.

Day after day they worked and planned for the good of the tribe; day after day her graciousness toward him increased. And day after day his love for her deepened and strengthened until it could be seen in his every look and act, and heard in every inflection of his voice when he spoke to her. Though her manner toward him showed no trace of overt coquetry, she made no effort to repulse his silent devotion or to check the growth of his passion.

A week after the departure of the delegation found him fully looking the part of a gallant lover—ardent, youthful, almost handsome. He had lost much of his former look of pensive severity. Even the silvery hairs over his temples seemed to be regaining their original ruddy brown.

A few days later one of the lines of levels happened to bring him and the girl to the edge of the coulee, across from the butte. He suggested that they go down and across to the spring rill for a drink.

As they turned back, Marie recognized the exact spot where he had been shot. Womanlike, she shuddered and turned pale at the recollection, though at the time of the occurrence she had been so brave.

"Look!" she said in a half-whisper. "Here is where you fell. I thought you were killed!"

"The experience was well worth while," he replied. His voice shook with the irresistible passion of his love. "Dearest!—let me call you that here, this once! It was here I first looked into the depths of your heart, had learned how good and kind you are."

The girl turned to hide her face from the reverent adoration of his gaze.

"No, no," she murmured. "Don't, please!"

"I must speak, dear," he replied. "I ask nothing of you. It is only that I wish to tell you how you made me realize again that life is worth living. When I came from the Coast, I had lost one dearer to me than anyone else in all the world—my mother. She was a little woman, very frail—her blue eyes were dim and faded, her hair white; but even when she—was at the very end—her dear eyes sought to ease my grief with the same look you gave me as you bent over me here and thought me fatally injured."

"Please!" begged the girl, choking back a sob. "I do not deserve—Your mother!—but I am not kind nor good!"

Hardy went on in the same voice of profound passion: "You lifted me out of the shadow of the Valley. You came to me in my blank darkness, a glorious light of divine goodness that compelled me to see that all was not wrong with the universe—that even so great a loss as mine might be for the best."

"I am not what you think me—I am not!" she reiterated.

"You restored my faith and hope," he insisted. "It would be selfish of me to ask anything more of you now—"

"It would be useless—useless!" she cried.

He was too little versed in feminine nature to realize that her vehemence might indicate an effort to suppress an inner doubt of the assertion. Had he been a few years younger, youthful impetuosity might have won him that which his reverent respect shrank from urging. He had taken her gloved hand. He pressed it to his lips, and freed her.

"I shall not annoy you, dear," he said. "Yet I cannot take that as final. I shall wait until he returns. Then I shall take my fighting chance."

"You will?" she whispered.

"I shall not give up until you have pledged yourself to him. If I can, I will prevent that. He cannot possibly love you as I love you. If it is possible to win you for my wife, I will do it."

Marie quivered, and shrank from him as if startled. "You say, when he comes back— But until then you—you will not—"

"Until then we shall continue to be the same good comrades that we have been."

The girl drew in a deep breath. "Then—let us go back to work."

Hardy accepted the suggestion with a self-control that was as remarkable

Poor Get Their Dole of Fish at New York's Sea Food Market

GETTING THEIR SUPPLY OF FREE FISH

Charity takes the form of free distribution of surplus fish every Friday at the Fulton market, New York City, where the greater portion of the city's fish supply is handled. After the early day's business is done poor women, with a smaller number of men, gather at the market to receive their doles of sea food fresh from the ocean. Such a gathering, photographed on a recent Friday morning, is seen in the picture.

IT'S YOUR LIVER! YOU'RE BILIOUS, HEADACHY, SICK

Don't Stay Constipated, With Breath Bad, Stomach Sour or a Cold.

Enjoy life! Liven your liver and bowels to-night and feel fine.

To-night sure! Remove the liver and bowel poison which is keeping your head dizzy, your tongue coated, breath offensive and stomach sour. Don't stay bilious, sick headachy, constipated and full of cold. Why don't you get a box of Cascarets from the drug store now? Eat one or two to-night and enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced. You'll wake up feeling fit and fine. Cascarets never gripe or bother you all the next day like calomel, salts and pills. They act gently but thoroughly. Mothers should give cross, sick, bilious or feverish children a whole Cascaret any time. They are harmless and children love them. —Adv.

Escape TOOTH Troubles

—by keeping your teeth REALLY CLEAN.

"But," you say, "I brush my teeth regularly, yet they decay."

Yes, you brush them, but do you REALLY CLEAN them? Tonight, after brushing your teeth, examine them closely. You will likely find an accumulation of tartar on the enamel and bits of food deposit hiding in the crevices.

Decay, as well as the dangerous gum disease called Pyorrhea, usually develops only in the mouth where germ-laden tartar is present.

SENRECO, the formula of a dental specialist, keeps the teeth REALLY CLEAN. It embodies specially prepared soluble granules unusually effective in cleaning away food deposits. Moreover, it is particularly destructive to the germ of Pyorrhea.

Go to your dealer today and get a tube of Senreco—keep your teeth REALLY CLEAN and protect yourself against Pyorrhea and decay. Send 4c to Senreco, 304 Walnut St., Cincinnati, Ohio, for liberal-sized trial package.

COKE MARKET WITHOUT MATERIAL CHANGE; RECENT ADVANCE IS MORE THAN A FLURRY

Spot Furnace Prices Recede Slightly From the High Mark.

FIRST HALF CONTRACT UP TO $4

Foundry Coke Reestablishes Its Spread Above Furnace, Spot Commanding $8 to $8.25 and Contract $5 to $6; Most Spectacular Pig Iron Rise in History

Special to The Weekly Courier.

PITTSBURG, Nov. 1.—While spot furnace coke has fluctuated since last report it is not materially changed from a week ago. Contract furnace coke is higher and foundry is higher on both spot and contract. Thus the market as a whole is decidedly stronger and there is less reason to assume that the sharp advance in spot furnace coke over the past few weeks represents simply a flurry. Coke is actually scarce and is in grave danger of becoming scarcer. Consumers are fully alive to the situation and are thinking less of price than of prospects for delivery.

Last Thursday, spot furnace coke sold at $8.00, the top price on this movement. Saturday sales were made at $7.00 and this remained the market until yesterday afternoon. Yesterday morning there were sales at $7.00 but all sales late in the day were at $7.25 and today's market is quotable at $7.00 to $7.25.

The contract furnace coke market has stiffened. Until this week the highest price done on contract was $3.75, and that only for the half year. A contract involving about 10,000 tons a month over the first half has now been made at $4.00, while a recent buyer of about the same tonnage, who consented to pay $3.75 for the half year but would not consider the price for the whole year, has now extended the contract for the second half at the same price. Thus on the basis of last sales the contract market is quotable at $3.75 to $4.00, but the common opinion is that still higher prices are going to be realized on contract. A very remarkable rumor is in circulation, to the effect that certain furnace interests which bought coke for first half several weeks ago at considerably under $3.00 are now fearful that they will not get deliveries and are contemplating buying their coke afresh in other quarters and at the higher prices now being obtained.

Foundry coke, which lagged behind furnace coke in its sudden advances, has now caught up and re-established its spread above furnace. For several days past the best brands have been bringing for spot shipment $8.00 to the dealer or about $8.25 to the consumer, while indifferent brands are easily commanding $7.50. A week ago spot foundry, on the basis of actual sales, was quoted at less than spot furnace, simply because the advance in furnace had been so sudden that the foundry market had not recognized it.

Interest has suddenly appeared in foundry coke on contract. The majority of contracts were made for the twelvemonth beginning July 1, but a few consumers elected to buy only for the half year, which was offered at the same price as the twelvemonth, sellers being indifferent as to which period was selected. The latter sales were at $3.75. Last Friday a contract was made for several carloads a month over the first half at $5.00 net to the dealer or about $5.25 to the consumer, and this appears to have been the first contract on the new movement. This week it is reported that as high as $6.00 has been done on a similar contract. The market now stands:

Spot furnace	$7.00@$7.25
Contract furnace	$3.75@$4.00
Spot foundry	$7.50@$8.25
Contract foundry	$5.00@$6.00

The local pig iron market has had the most spectacular rise in a generation, all grades being quotable fully $2 a ton higher than a week ago. The advanced quotations are based on actual sales involving fair sized tonnages, but the total turnover has not been large, as sellers have acquired the habit of selling only a moderate tonnage at a price, and then asking a further advance. The pig iron advance reflects in part the natural ease with which the market should advance when steel prices are proportionately vastly higher than pig iron, and in part fears of a definite scarcity of pig iron from increasing consumption by the steel industry as more steel making capacity is completed, and in part fears of seriously reduced make of pig iron by the merchant furnaces on account of coke shortage. A few merchant furnaces are already short of coke to such an extent that they have been compelled to slow down their operations. While the steel interests can afford to pay fancy prices for spot furnace coke to eke out poor deliveries on contracts, the merchant furnaces cannot afford to do so. The market is now quotable strong as follows:

Bessemer	$26.00@$27.00
Basic	$22.00@$23.00
No. 2 foundry	$23.00@$24.00
Malleable	$22.50@$23.50
Gray forge	$22.50@$23.50

These prices are f. o. b. Valley furnaces, prices delivered Pittsburg being higher by the 95 cents freight.

Somerset Miners Get Increase.

Operators in the Somerset county coal field have announced a wage increase affecting all miners and day laborers. The increase for labor amounts to 25 cents a day, and that for mining 7 cents per ton. The rate for pick mining thus is increased to an average of 65 cents. Among the larger coal companies to announce the increase are the Jenner-Quemahoning, Consolidation, Merchants, Brothers-Valley, Knickerbocker and Baker-Whiteley.

Frick Re-Elected.

At the recent meeting of the stockholders of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad H. C. Frick was re-elected a director.

COKE TRADE SUMMARY.

The operators of the Connellsville region did relatively better than the railroads last week in meeting the hard conditions imposed by the recent sharp advance in coke prices. With slightly better efficiency in the workmen, more active ovens and a better week's average car supply, they increased both production and shipment, the former to 430,000 tons and the latter to 418,000 tons. The railroads being unable to supply sufficient cars to move the coke some stock was laid down, being estimated at about 12,000 tons.

Coal shipments fell off 7,000 tons, due to continued shortage in car supply. The tonnage movement from the region, including coke with the coal reduced to its coke equivalent, was 552,000 tons, an increase of 8,000 tons.

Spot coke has receded slightly from the high point of $8 reached late last week, and is now quotable at $7@$7.25. The contract furnace market has stiffened, one contract for 10,000 tons per month having been closed at $4 for first half. The market is quotable at $3.75@$4, with expectations that it will go higher.

Foundry coke has caught up with furnace on both spot and contract prices, the former ranging $7.50@$8.25, the latter $5@$6.

PIG IRON LEADS IN PRICE ADVANCE

Average Increase of $2 a Ton During The Past Week Due in Part to the Restricted Supply of Coke.

Special to The Weekly Courier.

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—The American Metal Market and Daily Iron & Steel Report will review the steel and iron trade tomorrow as follows:

There has been an average advance in pig iron in the past week in the various markets amounting to almost $2 a ton. Bessemer, basic and foundry at Valley furnaces are all up $2 a ton, while Southern iron is up $1.50 and the lake front districts show various advances. The cause of the advance is partly psychological, as it is easy for prices on any commodity to advance these days, and partly physical, as the output of some merchant furnaces has been restricted by coke shortage and further and more serious restrictions are in prospect. The whole coke market has advanced sharply in the past week, furnace and foundry coke for spot shipment and under contract being quotably higher. In the past week spot furnace coke has been regularly bringing $7.00 to $8.00. The steel works can afford to pay such prices while the merchant furnaces cannot.

Unfinished steel is quotably higher, at $50 flat for soft steel billets and $52 for sheet bars. The trade has been combed over thoroughly in the interests of domestic and foreign buyers with the result that all offerings below those prices have been absorbed, and no large tonnage was secured at that.

The finished steel products have become quite irregular in price, as the mills no longer have definite sales policies. They accept one order and decline another, and are by no means uniform in quotations on the business they do accept. Bars, plates and shapes are all distinctly higher, for delivery at mill convenience. The minimum on galvanized sheets is up $5 a ton, to 5.00c. Sales of tin plate at $5.75, even to regular customers, are now quite restricted, and consumers who receive insufficient allotments at $5.75 from their regular mills are now bidding $6.25 in the open market, while $6.50 was done this week on 50,000 tons for export.

October outputs have been large at all the mills and many have broken previous records for a month.

FEAR GAS SHORTAGE

Industrial Concerns in Monongahela Valley Warned to Secure Other Fuel.

A gas shortage worse than that of last winter is feared by industrial concerns along the Monongahela valley their fears being aggravated by the announcement of the People's Natural Gas company, who warned industries where possible to arrange for the use of some other fuel.

At the American Steel & Wire Company at Donora powdered coal has already been installed in use as a fuel as a substitute for gas. The other steel mills along the valley which have been using gas are expected to arrange for the use of something else in the way of fuel.

Private concerns in the valley have noticed a curtailment of supply, but they anticipated no such shortage as that feared by the industries.

PLANS ARE BEING DEVISED TO MAKE AN ACTUAL 8-HR. DAY

Railroads Arranging Working Schedule to Fit the Adamson Law.

RUNS WILL END WITH 8 HOURS

Instead of at Division Points as Has Been the Custom Heretofore, Crews Being Required to Make Full 8 Hours Time in Order to Get 8 Hours Pay.

The New York Central railroad has perfected arrangements to substitute an actual eight-hour work day for its trainmen for the present one of indeterminate duration up to 10 hours, in the event of constitutionality of the Adamson act shall be affirmed by the Supreme Court. The Pennsylvania railroad is preparing to do so in the same eventuality. Their example will, it is anticipated, be followed by other roads, says F. A. Layman, railroad editor of the Pittsburg Dispatch.

At present there are many runs that are covered normally in less than eight hours, nevertheless, the men making them receive pay for 10 hours' work. Under the new arrangement, the men will be required to work a full eight hours. For example, the run to Youngstown from Pittsburg is 65 miles and ordinarily is made in less than eight hours, hence a crew making it would be required to double back over the line with another train till the expiration of its eight-hour trick, when another crew would pick up the train and bring it into Pittsburg, it in turn taking out yet another train for the unexpired portion of its eight hours.

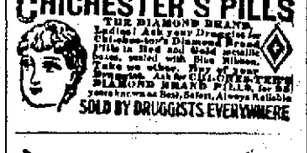

Referring to the proposed rearrangement of runs, the railroads explain that no physical reason exists why a train crew should not be required to run beyond a given division terminal. That they have not is simply conformance to custom. The engines can be changed at division points, as usual, but the men can be required to go on till they have worked full eight hours.

At present a passenger crew takes a train from Pittsburg to Altoona, for example, and returns with another, thereby making the equivalent of two work days between sunrise and sunset; but by the proposed plan the double run would be made usually within the prescribed eight-hour day and when from any cause it should be exceeded by an hour or two the men would receive only pro rata overtime, instead of the present two days' pay.

Adverting to the suggestion that crews may be relieved at points on the lines distant from division terminals upon completing their eight-hour days, it is suggested by the railroads that they would probably be willing to deadhead the men thus marooned to their destinations, but that they will not be recompensed for the time thus consumed by them, nor yet the time consumed in traveling to points at which they shall pick up trains.

Yet again, it is suggested by the railroads that since existing wage agreements were made by the roads and men, the Adamson act would abrogate all of them, since a contract may not be altered in its provisions except with the consent of all the parties thereto and the carriers never have consented to the eight-hour provision.
